ECON 4999 satisfies a “critical thinking” requirement. Consequently, the basic idea behind the ECON 4999 courses is participation on the part of the student. This participation may take a number of forms, but writing and speaking are the two that are stressed here, along with the development of research skills.

This section of ECON 4999 is concerned with the economics of migration, and especially with the economics of U.S. immigration. Presently, U.S. immigration is a highly visible public policy issue. It promises to be a major issue for years to come. Rarely does a day pass without one of the area newspapers carrying an article about migration. These articles range broadly from immigrant sweat shops in Los Angeles to refugees in various regions of the world to more general issues such as the labor market consequences of U.S. immigration. Illegal immigration, especially from Mexico but from elsewhere as well, is a topic that gets much attention. Recently, the issue of amnesty for illegal aliens has drawn considerable interest in the press.

My goal is to encourage you to think critically like an economist about various migration issues. To this end, I see the course unfolding in two major parts. First, I will lecture for approximately the first two months. My intention is to acquaint you with various concepts and issues relating to U.S. internal migration and to U.S. immigration, including U.S. immigration policy. During this period, I expect you to develop a migration topic for intense study, to begin to prepare a draft of your research paper, and to work with me to prepare a list of background readings relevant to your specific topic. I also expect you to prepare and present a short critique during the period.

The second part of the class unfolds during November and December when you will present your research to the class. These oral presentations will require considerable preparation. I expect each member of the class to speak for about 20 minutes. Each individual will be required to recommend one article for the class to read before the presentation. This recommendation should be made one week prior to the actual presentation. The idea here is to sufficiently acquaint the rest of the class with your topic that we will have some background to understand your discussion, as well as to ask good questions.

During this period, I also expect to hold at least one debate in which each member of the class is required to participate.

My own recent book (with John M. McDowell) Legal U.S. Immigration, is required reading. Several additional suggested readings are listed on the “Suggested Readings” sheet. These are on reserve, and I would like you to read them. I would like you to access “Migration News” on the World Wide Web. This is a lengthy monthly publication that contains great detail concerning recent developments regarding migration and especially international migration. You should be able to get numerous ideas from this source. It also will help keep you current about policy developments concerning U.S. immigration. The last two months (issues) are available on the web, and you should examine these back issues. The web site is: http://migration.ucdavis.edu/. A second web site that may prove helpful is www.migrationinformation.org. This site provides migration data for many countries around the world.
My intention is to work closely with each of you to help you design a program of study of your own. This program of study will be strongly oriented toward your research topic. However, from time to time I will suggest articles for you to read in connection with my lectures.

To participate you must be in attendance. In this class I have an “attendance clause” (see below). Whether students make their presentations early in the term or late, I want them to have an audience. Moreover, I want this class to be a pleasant and exciting learning experience for each of you. Your experience is in an important sense tied not only to your own participation, but also to that of your fellow students.

ASSIGNMENTS

1. From an economist's perspective, a 3 to 4 page (doubled-spaced) critique of a current article (or editorial) regarding U.S. immigration taken from the popular press (i.e., newspaper or magazine). Please attach to your critique a copy of the article you select. Points will be deducted for failure to meet the length requirement noted above. Oral presentations should be about 5 to 7 minutes.

   Due: September 19 (Presentations begin during the week of September 24-26.)
   Points: 20

2. We will have a debate regarding U.S. immigration. This will be held during the week of October 22-24.

   Points: Debate 15

3. A major research paper. During the first five weeks of the class, each student is to identify a topic for detailed study. The deadline for you to decide on a topic is September 26. By September 26, I expect each student to have discussed his/her topic with me and received my approval to proceed with that topic. This is the study that you will be presenting during November and December. A draft of your paper is due by October 24. The final draft is due December 12. You will be expected to make an oral presentation of your work. The presentation must occupy at least 20 minutes, not including questions from the class and your answers to these questions. You will be penalized 3 points for falling short of 17 minutes and for exceeding 22 minutes in your own presentation. If you fall more than 5 minutes short of 20, you will be penalized 10 points. Topics must be discussed with me and approved by me. I will also help you with references. Presentations will begin November 7 and continue through December 12.

   Final drafts of papers are due December 12. Working drafts must be submitted to me seven days prior to your presentation. I will read and make comments/suggestions that can be incorporated into your presentation and your final draft.

   Points: Paper 35
   Oral Presentation 15
OFFICE HOURS

Office:  Economics - Room 106

Hours:  Tuesday and Thursday, 3:30– 4:45 pm, and by appointment.

Summary of Points:

1. Critique
2. Research Paper
3. Oral Presentation of Research Paper
4. Debate (Presentation and Discussion)
5. Other Participation

TOTAL POINTS

Less 10 points for four (4) absences, less four (-4) points for each additional absence.
