

CALL FOR PAPERS

The University of Colorado at Boulder Department of Religious Studies Graduate Student Journal announces a call for papers for our upcoming 3rd Edition of NEXT: Emerging Voices of Religious Studies Scholarship. The deadline for submissions is April 3rd, 2009.

The NEXT journal holds as self-evident the fact that graduate students who matriculate from a discipline are the next generation of scholars who will be shaping their field. By design, this journal facilitates students' ability to communicate, disseminate ideas, critiques and direction that will shape the future for the academic study of religious traditions.

The theme of this edition of the journal will be centered on issues regarding religion in the public sphere. Variations on this theme include, but are not limited to:

- Religion and Modernity
- Religion and Politics
- Religion and the Media
- Religion and Nature
- The Ethics of Applied Scholarship

Analysis of theory and methodology is used to better articulate certain topics of religious phenomenon within a global context. We expect that the papers within this journal will further discussion concerning theoretical and methodological issues in the academic study of religion and related fields.

Papers are to be no more than 20 pages long, double spaced (not including bibliography). Please send submissions to sosrjournal@gmail.com in Microsoft Word format and include reliable contact information and institutional affiliation.
