Guide for speech writing:

If you can incorporate three elements, ethic, passion, and logic—you will have a good speech.

a. Ethic—means that you are honorable delegate in your speeches
   i. Begin your speech by saying “thank you honorable chair”
   ii. End by thanking the delegates and yielding back to the chair
   iii. Incorporate diplomatic language (tip: read resolutions and speeches by ambassadors from your country)
   iv. Refer to your self in the third person
   v. Thank others in your committee as much as possible
   vi. Condemn, criticize, and argue—but do it humbly

b. Passion—means that there is heart in what you say.
   i. You need to make the people in the room feel your argument
   ii. Contrast your voice, (high, low, fast, slow)
   iii. Use hand gestures (but not too many)
   iv. Stand up straight, button your jacket; straighten your tie, etc…
   v. Leave pens, rings, papers behind, they will distract you
   vi. This is also the creative side of your speeches.
      1. Say something unexpected that grabs attention
      2. Use quotes from famous people in your country

c. Logic—the part of your speech that makes an argument
   i. All these other tactics just work to make people listen to you, buy your substance needs to be sound as well ii. Attribute, attribute, attribute
   iii. Set up your argument in a way that makes sense—follow through from beginning to end
   iv. Avoid logical fallacies
