As more of the world’s population moves to cities, it is critical to understand how people live in urban environments. This course will examine how anthropologists study urban life, theoretically and methodologically. Using ethnographic studies from cities in varied world regions, along with an introduction to foundational theory on the city, we will explore dilemmas and strategies for surviving and living a meaningful life in the world’s growing metropolises.