Description of the Field:
Consultants are professionals who are trained to solve problems, devise strategies, and improve the general health of their clients no matter what the industry. Typically, consultants conduct research, analyze data, prepare reports, and present findings; less frequently a consultant will become involved in the actual implementation of the plan. Work weeks of between fifty to seventy-five hours are not unusual. Consultants tend to work in teams of 3 to 4 individuals, and travel is an important aspect of the job in order to spend time on-site with clients.

Insider Advice & Trends:
You do not have to be an expert in a field to start working in consulting. Many firms hire entry level and interns for a variety of opportunities and from many majors including liberal arts. Consulting internships are competitive, and companies will begin to fill summer positions in the fall, so start early and take advantage of your network, on-campus recruiting, and employer information sessions.

Consulting requires a broad range of skills. Employers look for students with demonstrated analytical ability, examples of leaderships and teamwork, strong interpersonal skills and documented results and outcomes.
