In collaboration with the Anderson Language Technology Center (ALTEC), the CU Boulder Center for Asian Studies has launched a CLAC (Culture and Language Across the Curriculum) pilot program for the 2017-18 academic year. CLAC is a national framework designed to promote the use of foreign language to enhance the study of non-language subjects. In 2017-18, three one-credit co-seminars will be offered to complement courses in Asian Languages and Civilizations, History, and Religious Studies, using materials in Arabic, Chinese, and Japanese. We are currently seeking a project coordinator to assist in launching the program.

Key Responsibilities:
- Help train Student Language Facilitators (SLFs) to lead co-seminar discussions, in collaboration with ALTEC. (SLFs will already have language skills; training will focus on pedagogy.)
- Attend at least 3 CLAC co-seminar meetings throughout the semester and hold biweekly meetings with SLFs to provide feedback and mentoring.
- Coordinate program assessment and ongoing development workshops, utilizing survey instrument and focus-group sessions.

Qualifications:
- Minimum of an MA in linguistics, languages, second language acquisition, or related field.
- Familiarity with CLAC preferred.
- Working knowledge of the three languages used in the co-seminars is not required, though general familiarity with Asia and Asian languages will be helpful.

Compensation:
- Lecturer position at A&S rate for one course for fall and spring semesters ($4200/semester).
- Part-time stipend available for summer 2017 and summer 2018. Desired start date is August 14, 2017 with 20 hours per week until classes start on August 28.

To Apply:
- Please send a resume and cover letter to cas@colorado.edu. Review of applications will begin on August 7, 2017 and continue until a finalist has been selected.
- Contact CAS Executive Director Danielle Rocheleau Salaz with questions, at salaz@colorado.edu or 303-735-5312.
