Who should, and who should not, take this course?

Take the course if all or a lot of the following applies to you:

You are an economics major psychology major, philosophy major or neuroscience major, and have a strong interest in how these fields relate, and have had some courses in microeconomics.

You are a junior or senior with a high G.P.A: someone your friends will call a good and highly-motivated student.

You are the type who is self-motivated: someone who does not need a deadline of tomorrow to work tonight.

You want to do learn more research, doing it, and writing about it—see if you like it.

You want a small class where the teacher will know who you are and might be able to write you a letter of reference.

You are considering going to graduate school in economics, psychology, neuroscience, or whatever.

You have a strong interest in behavior and why we behave as we do.

You enjoy writing, and the process of reworking what you have written

You are a good writer

You want to consider alternative perspective and think outside-of-the-box.

Otherwise, in the words of Dante Alighieri
Or, at least talk to me sooner rather than later about whether you should be in the class.
