

Michael Orosco (PhD '07, MA '01) received a $1.4 million grant from the U.S. Department of Education, Institute of Education Sciences, National Center for Special Education Research to support growth in literacy, language and cognition of Latino English-language learners with his co-principal investigator, Lee Swanson. Orosco credits his doctoral mentor and advisor Professor Janette Klingner as the cornerstone to his success and also expresses gratitude for the scholarship support he received from the university. He is also the recipient of the 2009 Outstanding Dissertation Research Award, Honorable Mention, American Association of Hispanic Higher Education/Educational Test Service; American Educational Research Association Outstanding Dissertation-Bilingual Education Research Special Interest Group (2008); Outstanding Dissertation Research Award, National Association for Bilingual Education (2008). He also received The Best Should Teach Award: Outstanding Doctoral Student (2008). Orosco is an assistant professor at the University of California at Riverside's Graduate School of Education.