

Colorado Law is Affordable

Even as law school tuition for both in-state and out-of-state residents has increased dramatically nationwide, the University of Colorado Law School continues to provide a significant cost advantage for Colorado residents.

The following chart shows tuition, fees, and living expenses for three years of law school for Colorado state residents, who would pay out-of-state tuition rates at other schools.

Non-Resident students can apply for Colorado residency after their first year and qualify for in-state tuition rates. Learn more about the residency classification petition and the timeline for applying for residency.

Additional funding opportunities are also available to you as upperclassmen through scholarships, fellowships, and awards. Each spring, our 2L and 3L students apply for more than 100 scholarships awarded by Colorado Law to help offset tuition costs. We regularly post scholarships received from outside sources to our Scholarships webpage. Check this site regularly for new opportunities.
