2016 Economics Career Fair: Registration Now Open!

Looking for your first job in economics?
Or, is your firm or agency hunting for a rising star in the field?

You are invited to attend the 2016 Economics Career Fair, on Friday, October 28 in Washington, DC.

The National Association for Business Economics (NABE) joins Boston University, Brandeis University, Columbia University, George Washington University, Georgetown University, Johns Hopkins University, and New York University in co-hosting the 2016 Economics Career Fair.

The event will bring together scores of highly-qualified candidates and dozens of recruiters from business, government, and consulting firms with hiring needs in the field of economics and analytics. The fair will be held at the National Association of Home Builders Conference Center in downtown Washington, DC. (see below for a list of past employers)

About the Career Fair

For Candidates
The 2016 Economics Career Fair is designed to give job candidates access to a large number of employers from both the government and private sector over the course of the half-day event. Registration is available to current students or recent graduates of consortium schools and NABE Members.

More information for candidates

For Employers
The Economics Career Fair is designed to allow your recruiter to interact with hundreds of highly-qualified candidates so that they can make the most of the half-day event. The exhibit hall layout offers an ideal setting for meeting and interviewing candidates. In addition, two weeks prior to the fair, all employers will receive a resume book and are encouraged to contact candidates to schedule 15-minute interviews in Recruiter’s Row, a section of the Career Fair reserved for employers to meet with candidates in a more private and quiet setting.

Download the Employers handbook and apply to exhibit at the Economics Career Fair.
