Today We Will Discuss

- Objectives for the accreditation site visit
- Key points about the campus budget
- Master schedule for the site team visit
- Expectations for CU-Boulder participants

Objectives

- Process of self examination allows us to see ourselves with a fresh perspective as we move forward under Flagship 2030.
- Qualities that help define CU-Boulder
 - Strong commitment to environmental stewardship
 - Growing global reach in a diverse world
 - Innovative approaches to teaching and learning
 - Collaboration in discovery and creativity
 - Sustained vision and agility

Objectives

- Take the opportunity to learn from the site team members and ask for advice on:
 - Helping constituencies understand the value and quality of faculty and programs
 - Sustaining quality with limited state funding
 - Identifying advocates for achieving our vision and potential

Objectives

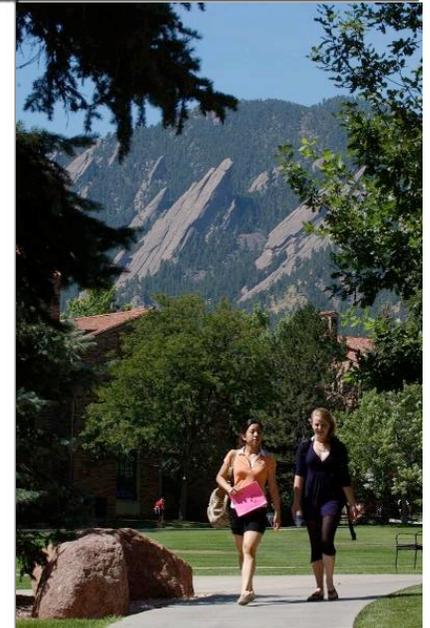

- Seek guidance from the site team members on specific initiatives
 - Expanding international enrollment
 - Enhancing student learning through efforts such as residential colleges
 - Supporting new research collaborations
 - Increasing graduate student enrollment
 - Achieving greater operating flexibility and funding streams to support Flagship 2030

Key Points about the Budget

- CU-Boulder FY09 state tax support began at $86M on $1.1B total funds budget
- Reductions in state tax support to higher education from FY09 to date translate into a potential reduction in state funding from $86M to $26M (a reduction of $60M)
- Fortunately, to date, all reductions to higher education have been temporarily backfilled with federal recovery act funds by the governor
- However, these funds will run out by no later than June 2011

Key Points about the Budget

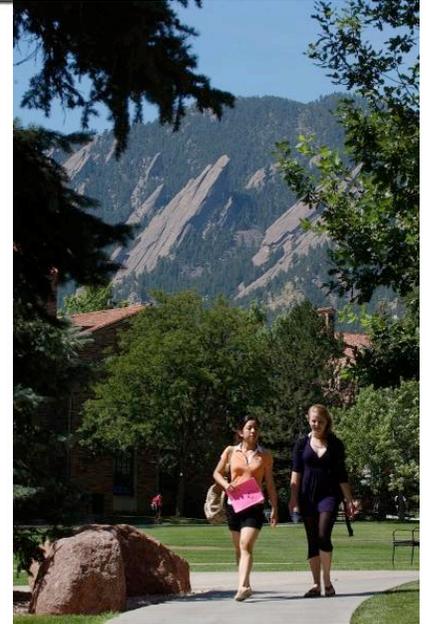

- Given current conditions, it's unlikely the economy will recover to a level that will allow the state to return funding to the $86M level before the temporary funds are exhausted – causing the university to reduce the budget by that amount
- Governor has informed us that the minimum permanent reduction will lower state support to $63M (a reduction of $23M)
- However, a larger permanent reduction is likely

Key Points about the Budget

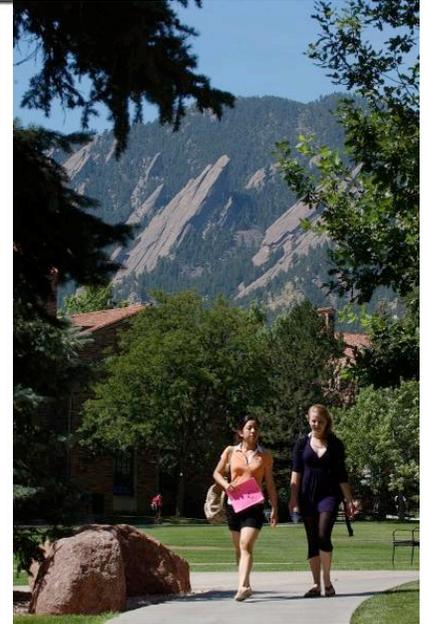

- In anticipation of the loss of federal backfill, UCB has decided to address what we know will be the minimum level of funding reductions before the federal funds run out in 2011
- A reduction of $13M was taken July 1, 2009 (FY10), and an additional $10M will be taken on July 1, 2010 (FY11)
- We will likely wait until Dec. 2010 to determine if further action is necessary

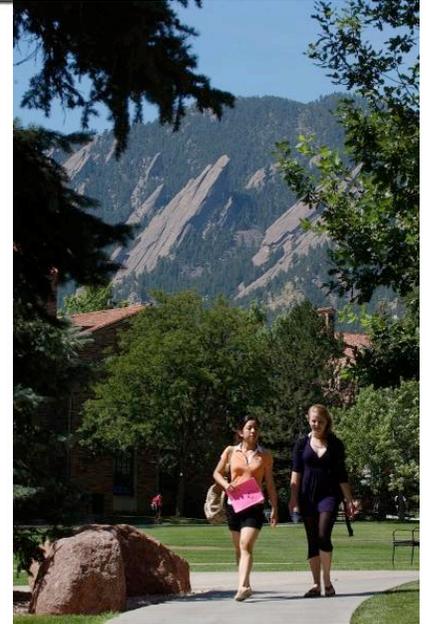

Key Points about the Budget

- The university is being prudent by taking some actions today to prevent a large “cliff-effect” on our state funding in 2011
- If economic conditions improve and projected reductions do not materialize in full, the university will be in better position to move forward
- In dealing with the state-support reductions, CU-Boulder is utilizing expense reductions, efficiency improvements and revenue enhancements

Key Points about the Budget

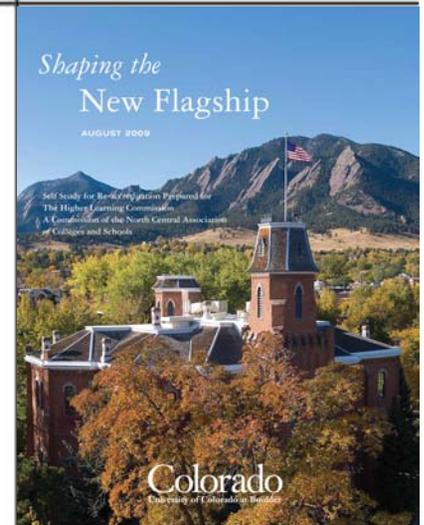

- These efforts will not be applied across the board, but enacted strategically to programs and units identified as best able to manage changes
- The provost, senior vice chancellor and I are working with the deans and vice chancellors to manage this difficult process
