INTRODUCTION

In the fall of 1938, the P. Lorillard Company, the producers of Old Gold cigarettes, started sponsoring a weekly radio show called Melody and Madness. The show was produced by Lennen & Mitchell, Inc., a New York City advertising agency. The agency retained comedian, actor, and writer Robert Benchley as star of the program. To provide musical accompaniment for the show, the agency considered several bands, among them Larry Clinton and Lud Gluskin. The latter was invited to participate with his band in an audition program that recorded in the summer or early fall of 1938. Eventually, the sponsor and the producer decided to engage Artie Shaw and His Orchestra for the show, a decision almost certainly influenced by the band's recent rise to the top of popularity polls following the enormously successful release of their Bluebird recording of Begin The Beguine in the summer of 1938.

The Shaw orchestra started rehearsals for the program on 18 November 1938. The premiere program aired on 20 November 1938. All programs until 27 June 1939 followed more or less the same format. After the opening theme Crazy Rhythm and the announcer's introduction Robert Benchley gave a comedy monologue. This was followed by the band's first tune and a commercial for Old Gold cigarettes. Robert Benchley and a hitherto unidentified cast then performed a comedy sketch addressing a topic of daily life under the title "How To..." (for example, "How To Decorate Your House"). The middle portion of the program belonged the band's second and third tune (sandwiching the second Old Gold commercial). Following the third musical selection, Robert Benchley and the cast did a comedy sketch titled "The Bounding Broomstick" – the broomstick would take Benchley and his cast to various countries and regions (some fictional) all over the world. The band would then play a fourth and final tune, usually a "killer-diller." Another commercial, a closing monologue by Benchley and a brief musical reprise acting as closing theme by the band concluded every "Melody and Madness" radio program. During the first four months, the program also featured a Canadian-born singer, Dick Todd, who, like Shaw, recorded for Bluebird Records. He was assigned one of the four tunes per show (accompanied by the orchestra). On the tunes with a Dick Todd vocal Artie Shaw did not play a clarinet solo (except on 15 January 1939 and 5 February 1939). It is not yet known why he left the radio program.

When Artie Shaw fell ill in early April 1939, the band's scheduled trip to California was delayed and the band missed the first two programs emanating from Los Angeles. Lud Gluskin and His Orchestra substituted for the ailing Shaw and his band. They eventually arrived in California, but Shaw did not complete his opening night at the Palomar Ballroom and was out sick again for another five weeks. The band – now under the temporary leadership of its arranger Jerry Gray - did appear, though, on the Melody and Madness show during this period.

Robert Benchley took an extended vacation from the Melody and Madness program after the 27 June 1939 broadcast. His role was – to some extent - taken over by Warren Hull, later by Mann Holliner. The comedy sketches were gone, as the Shaw band took over full charge of the program until 26 September 1939. Instead of four tunes the band now played up to seven tunes per program (interspersed with the inevitable Old Gold commercials). After the first month, the King Sisters, a vocal quartet, were added to the program and took two tunes per show (with accompaniment by the band).

Robert Benchley returned to the program for the fall season on 3 October 1939 and the program also returned to its previous combination of comedy and music. However, the 3 October 1939 broadcast turned out to be the Shaw Orchestra's final appearance on it. The uproar among fans caused by Artie Shaw's famous interview with Michael Mok (published in the 26 September 1939 edition of the New York Post) resulted - at the producer's request - in the immediate termination of his contract. His band was replaced by Lennie Hayton and His Orchestra. The radio show did not last very long after Shaw's departure, though, as it was also ended six weeks later after the broadcast of 14 November 1939.

The program was initially carried by the CBS radio network. It was switched to the NBC-Blue radio network in May 1939. The announcers for CBS were James Fleming (until 11 December 1938), Del Sharbutt (18 December 1938 - 2 April 1939) and Knox Manning (9 April 1939 - 14 May 1939). Knox Manning continued as the show's announcer after the switch to NBC-Blue from 23 May 1939 until 1 August 1939, then various announcers followed. Del Sharbutt returned on 26 September 1939 and was also heard on 3 October 1939.

Presumably, the producer, Lennen & Mitchell, had all programs recorded on 16" transcriptions by various transcription services. The transcriptions for most of the programs and some rehearsals covering the period from 18 November 1938 until 27 June 1939 have survived. So far, no transcriptions for the summer and fall programs of 1939 have surfaced, only a cassette copy for one complete program (1 August 1939) and a few airchecks of some of the other programs of that period.

The surviving transcriptions were acquired, possibly directly from P. Lorillard, by a private collector based in Florida. In the mid-1970s the collector loaned the entire set to a friend of his, Wally Heider, the legendary record producer (his labels included First Time Records, Hindsight and Swingtime Video). Wally transferred the transcriptions to reel-to-reel tapes with the intention to release them. The transcriptions were then returned to the private collector. In some manner (the circumstances are not clear), Ed Burke, a Florida-based record producer got hold of a complete copy of these reel-to-reel tapes (also on reel-to-reel tapes). He gave these tapes to another legendary record producer, Jerry Valburn – on what basis is not clear, either. Jerry issued most of the tunes performed by Artie Shaw from November 1938 to May 1939 on his Jazz Guild label – apparently over the objections of both Wally and Ed, each claiming - as did Jerry - to be the rightful owner of this material. Wally Heider eventually gave his set of tapes, as part of a major donation, to the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C. The set of tapes formerly owned by Jerry Valburn is now in the possession of the author.

More than 80 of these 16" transcriptions were put up for auction sale in the fall of 2020. All but two were acquired by the author. The discs turned out to be extremely dirty and required extensive cleaning to properly play. They were all magnificently restored by Karl Pearson, a friend of the author, and digitally preserved. Karl's transfers offer a superb audio quality, much better than the original transfers done by Wally Heider. Comparison with the Jerry Valburn tapes has revealed that (i) the transfers made by Wally (or his employees) were not complete as there is new, hitherto unknown material on the discs, and (ii) some 16" discs have apparently disappeared, because the tapes include material for which there is no longer a disc. In addition, Karl has managed to eliminate all skips and bumps present on the original Heider transfers. So, taken together the 16" transcriptions and the Jerry Valburn tapes represent an almost complete transfer of all music performed by Artie Shaw and His Orchestra on the Old Gold Melody and Madness radio program from November 1938 to June 1939.

The following list summarizes all tunes (including opening and closing themes, but not the many brief fanfares and short interludes preceding or following a commercial or comedy routine) performed by Artie Shaw and His Orchestra on the Old Gold program whether they have survived or not. The information on the programs starting on 4 July 1939 is based on the NBC radio network's radio logs which are part of the NBC Collection held by the Library of Congress. The main list indicates the main source for a surviving track, in most, not all, cases, either a 16" transcription or a Jerry Valburn tape. The footnotes indicate known releases of the material on Lp or CD. For the sake of completeness the audition program and the two broadcasts with Lud Gluskin and His Orchestra are also included.

⁸ Korst (page 11) lists two rehearsal sessions for 25 November 1938. Two sets of 16” transcriptions do exist for this date, however, their contents are identical. So even if there were two separate rehearsal sessions, only one of them was recorded and survives. It is assumed that Korst’s listing is based on a misunderstanding. The listing in Simosko (page 177) is thus accurate.

¹⁰⁴NBC's radio logs list Nightmare as opening and closing theme for every program aired by NBC since 23 May 1939. The surviving broadcasts, however, show that Nightmare was only used as regular theme song in the summer while Robert Benchley was absent. So, it is possible that with Robert Benchley's return the program also returned to Crazy Rhythm as opening theme and a closing reprise.
