Entrepreneurs and strategists excel at the single most challenging problem in business--creating value by aligning internal strengths and weaknesses with external opportunities and threats. Sometimes that involves creating entirely new companies, even entirely new industries.

Often it involves leading innovation or technology commercialization in existing businesses. Students in the Strategy and Entrepreneurship track at the Leeds School of Business develop the skills to create and lead new ventures, to restructure business models, and to build high-performing entrepreneurial teams.

Description of the Field

After completing the Strategy & Entrepreneurship Track, students have the confidence they need to successfully start businesses and lead companies. That could be starting your own firm, managing a family business, or buying a franchise right after your undergraduate studies or several years down the road. It could also be as a product manager, market analyst, or development team lead for an existing business. Other career opportunities include consulting practices, business incubators, and research firms in a plethora of industries.

Recruiting Schedule:
Most companies do not have a formal process for recruiting Strategy and Entrepreneurship Students. Consulting and the Big 4 companies recruit and hire in the fall semester, while smaller tech companies will recruit and hire year round. Internships during the summer before senior year or during senior year can potentially turn into full-time offers and are crucial for a well-rounded resume.
