

Green Chemistry Certificate Scholarship

CU Green Labs and CHEMunity are pleased to offer full scholarships for students to earn certificates in green chemistry during the academic year 2022-2023. The certificate program is hosted online by the University of Washington and consists of three online courses (for more info see the program website here) This certificate program is often taken by professionals in various fields of work and thus presents a unique opportunity for interacting and networking with those individuals online. Please note that scholarships are currently only available to undergraduate and graduate students who will have completed Organic Chemistry I by September 2022.

To apply for a scholarship please send the following materials in a single PDF document to gccs.scholarship@gmail.com.

- Cover page with the following information:
 - Name
 - Major(s), minor(s)
 - Current degree program and expected graduation year
 - Name, address, relationship (must be professional / academic), and contact information for letter of reference writer
- Short response section; please limit each response to 300 words.
 - In accepting this scholarship, you will be committing to enrolling in three contiguous modules over the course of one academic year (approximately 10 hours per week). How do you plan to successfully integrate this coursework into your schedule?
 - What impacts do you predict receiving this certificate will have on your academic and professional career?
 - It is our hope that the concepts and strategies learned in these courses will propagate through the Chemistry Department. How might you disseminate the knowledge you learn?
- Short summary of research experience or interests
