

It is extremely important to practice recalling the material. The first time I took the bar exam, I spent a lot of time making flash cards. Unfortunately, I spent so much time making the flash cards, that I didn't have enough time to practice reviewing them. Jenny Van (Class of 2010) showed me a recall technique called "Mapping."

Mapping is the process of (1) picking a subject or sub-subject, (2) giving yourself a time limit, (3) writing every rule you can remember in a bracket/tree format, and (4) reviewing what you missed. After the timer went off, I would compare my map to the bar review outline. I added the things I missed in red pen. Later that day/week I would repeat the mapping exercise, trying to incorporate the rules that I had previously missed. Below is an example of an Intentional Torts map that I created.

- Shandea Williams, Class of 2012, passed the February 2013 Bar Exam

Step 1:

Step 2:

