Program notes

Jean Françaix was a French Composer who wrote many works that include horn. His Cannon in Octave is a playful one-movement work filled with syncopation and numerous accidentals. This piece has a playful melody that is passed between the horn and piano throughout. Exactly one beat apart, the horn and piano play the same melody in a canon giving it a chaotic, yet fun feel.

The Adagio and Allegro by Schumann, composed in 1849, was published with the solo part for either horn or cello. Although a standard professional work, this piece tends to strike fear into the heart of many hornists.

Aleksandr Scriabin was a Russian composer and virtuoso pianist. While Scriabin is mainly known for his mystic-visionary piano works today, this Romance for horn was composed by him at a young age and was published after his death.

Mozart's Concerto No. 2 in E-flat Major, K. 417, is a standard professional work that was originally written for the performer Joseph Leutgeb (1732-1811) and was intended for natural horn.

The Sonata for Horn and Piano's first movement is a sonata-allegro form in a German Romantic style. The second movement is a singing mélodie in the style of Gounod. The ABA form features an undulating 12/8 meter which sweeps the song ever forward. The third movement presents the transformed theme in a rondo with grooving Afro-Cuban rhythms. Dr. Gina Gillie is Professor of Music at Pacific Lutheran University where she teaches horn, chamber music, aural skills, composition, music history, conducts a horn choir, and performs frequently in solo and chamber recitals.

Verne Reynolds was a prolific composer of more than 60 works. Within the international French horn community, Verne Reynolds continues to be celebrated for his technically challenging 48 Etudes (1961) and for his substantive textbook The Horn Handbook (1996).

Jan Koetsier's entertaining works have become staples of the repertoire. He wanted brass chamber music to be considered a serious domain in the music world, and he succeeded. In 1993 he founded the International Jan Koetsier Competition for the promotion and encouragement of young brass ensembles. His music is engaging, dramatic, lyrical, humorous, and intensely rhythmic.
