Recruiting undergraduates interested in law and policy to join our team as staff writers, focusing on writing opinion articles on various legal topics for our national audience.

Midwestern Citizen is an undergraduate legal/political op-ed publication present at top universities across the Midwest, Great Plains, and adjacent areas. We provide readers with analysis and commentary focused on law, policy, and sociocultural phenomena, and are consistently one of the most-read nonpartisan undergraduate op-ed publications in the country. Known for our aggressively intellectual style, we're committed to dispassionate, intense reflection on pressing societal issues, both present and historical.

Interested? Our staff writers' application is linked below.

MC is an independent, inter-university student organization. Positions are not paid, as staff are most akin to “club members” at a more typical university club. This is a great opportunity for students to practice and hone in skills in argumentative writing, policy analysis, and the synthesis of complex legal and political issues, and we would be happy to include CU Boulder students on staff.
