Pick a partner.

What are the three main points you investigated in your paper this week?

What are the three main points your partner investigated in their paper?

Look at your two coins. Circle their city-states or plot them on the map of South Italy. What are their dates?

How much do they weigh? How large are they?

What is the image on the obverse and reverse of each?

Find at least one reference to each of your coin types in each of the readings (if you can, really narrow in on the date as well as the city-state). What do the readings have to say about your coins?

How do your coins fit into our understanding of the political, military, social, and/or economic happenings of South Italy at the time? What light do they shed on the particular concerns and priorities of your city-states? (These are big questions; if you need to, you can pick just one of your two coins to focus on)

Now return to your and your partner's three main points in your papers. Pick one from each paper (if you shared a main point and want to focus on that it is fine). How do your coins fit into your understanding of that main point? How does working with the actual coins change your understanding?
