

The Program for Teaching East Asia University of Colorado Boulder

Teaching Korea in the Globalizing World Saturday, September 23, 2017

University of Colorado Denver Campus, 8:30 am - 4:15 pm

Teach your students the history behind
current events!

Are your students curious about contemporary South and North Korea because of their encounters with the Koreans in the news and with Korean goods, film, and pop culture?

This workshop will help teachers build on students' curiosity while addressing state standards. Participants will consider how to engage students in exploring political ideology, economic development, and national identity on the Korean peninsula. They will also learn strategies for developing critical thinking and media literacy skills through study of the Koreans.

Join Korea studies professors Sungyun Lim (University of Colorado), Suzy Kim (Rutgers University), and Dafna Zur (Stanford University) for Korean perspectives on the two states' approaches to global transformations and the distinct political and economic systems and national identities that have developed in response. TEA staff and participants will consider ways to integrate Korean narratives and multimedia primary sources into classroom instruction about contemporary South and North Korea in a variety of courses, from elementary social studies to secondary world history, global studies, world geography, world literature, and humanities.

Participants will receive:

- ♦ Light breakfast and Korean lunch
- ♦ Classroom materials and resources
- ♦ Professional development contact hours
- ♦ The Koreans by Charles K. Armstrong (K-12 inservice teachers only)
