

PUPPIES! KITTENS!

Now that we have your attention...

SOCY 4017: Animals and Society, Fall 2018

MWF: 8:00 – 8:50 a.m.

Animals matter for human existence in so many ways that it is hard to imagine the entity we call “society” without them. They figure heavily in our language, food, clothing, family structure, economy, education, entertainment, science, and recreation. Animals and Society covers a range of topics, including:

- the shifting roles and statuses of animals in society;
- key perspectives and concepts in the field of human–animal studies;
- non-human animals in analyses of social issues;
- the norms and structures organizing human-animal relations;
- the boundaries drawn between humans and animals; and
- the social, cultural, and ethical consequences of human-animal relations.

Open to sophomores and above.
No prerequisite classes.

If you have not taken SOCY 1001, please contact Zoe Hurley (Zoe.Hurley@colorado.edu) for assistance with enrollment.

For questions about the course, please contact Jessica Austin (Jess.Austin@colorado.edu).

This course is required for CU’s Animals and Society Certificate.