II. Institutional Context

The Institutional Context section provides an overview of the institution's setting, the community it serves, and the broader socio-environmental factors influencing its sustainability efforts. This section aims to demonstrate the institution's unique position and capacity to foster sustainability through its academic, operational, community engagement, and investment activities. Additionally, these questions aim to explore not only the existence of sustainability definitions but also their development process, practical application, and overall impact within the institution and its broader community.

For reference, Carnegie's definition is as follows: "The Carnegie Foundation defines sustainability in higher
